Text A

You read this article.

Is reading a thing of the past?

There is a popular opinion that most young people have no time for interests such as reading because they are glued to their mobile phones, messaging friends or using social media.

This opinion is not supported by the facts. JK Rowling's Harry Potter books and novels by David Walliams and Jacqueline Wilson sell in large numbers to under-sixteens. Writers such as Roald Dahl are still enjoyed by many young people whose parents would also have read his books.

What has changed is the way young people read. Now the majority of people under 30 in the UK say they prefer to read on a tablet, laptop or computer. Those young people who seem busy on their mobile devices may well be reading a book or an article. Modern devices mean that you can download novels by famous authors from the past, such as Charles Dickens, for free.

In the USA, an increasing number of readers now don't read printed books at all, with many young people signed up to online borrowing services. New technology means more people across the world have the opportunity to read material onscreen. For example, in some parts of Africa and Asia, children can read many more books now than they did 10 years ago. This is because of the availability of mobile phones.

The changes in the way that people read have affected libraries in the UK. Nowadays fewer people go to libraries to borrow books and so libraries are finding new ways to encourage reading. Many now stock e-books and serve refreshments. Others are starting book clubs and workshops for young adults that include helping them to write their own blogs.

It's clear that, despite what some people think, young people still enjoy reading.

Short story competitions and how to win them

So you've decided to enter a competition to write a short story.

Let's start with the things you have to do to stand a chance of winning. Remember the deadline for entries and keep to it. If the competition asks for a maximum number of words, you have to keep to that too. There is no point wasting time writing a 10,000-word masterpiece if the competition only wants you to write 1,000 words.

Make sure your opening paragraph is interesting to readers. Make it as short as you can and get to the action in your story quickly.

You should avoid ghosts unless you have a really original idea for a story or include a surprising ending. Similarly, science fiction stories won't win if they simply copy other stories. Writing good love stories is really hard. Stories that end with 'then I woke up and it was all a dream' won't impress the judges. The same goes for stories that are too exaggerated. It's best to write something that is personal to you. However, a simple account of everyday life won't win a competition unless you have something unusual to offer.

Too many first-time writers think they have to start with a description of the weather and create complicated stories and that's not true. The very best writers produce clear stories about people you can believe in.

The best advice I can give is to write the ending first. This will make your story much easier to write. Remember the ending is the last thing the judges will read so make it memorable. Check through your story before sending it off and make sure you keep a copy.

Finally, enjoy writing it. A story that's enjoyable to write will probably be enjoyable to read.
