Text A

The future's bright

Fast forward a few years and domestic life could look very different for us all. There are some very exciting developments ahead that could make household chores much easier. This is due to the development of smart household gadgets, which will be able to communicate with each other and carry out actions independently.

Your day might begin with a gentle nudge from your smart mattress. After you get up your bed will make itself, while a phone app beeps with advice on what to wear today.

As you enter the bathroom, your shower is already running at the perfect temperature, triggered by your phone. You step onto your computer scales and a full health report appears on your bathroom mirror, detailing your weight, body fat, heart rate and BMI.

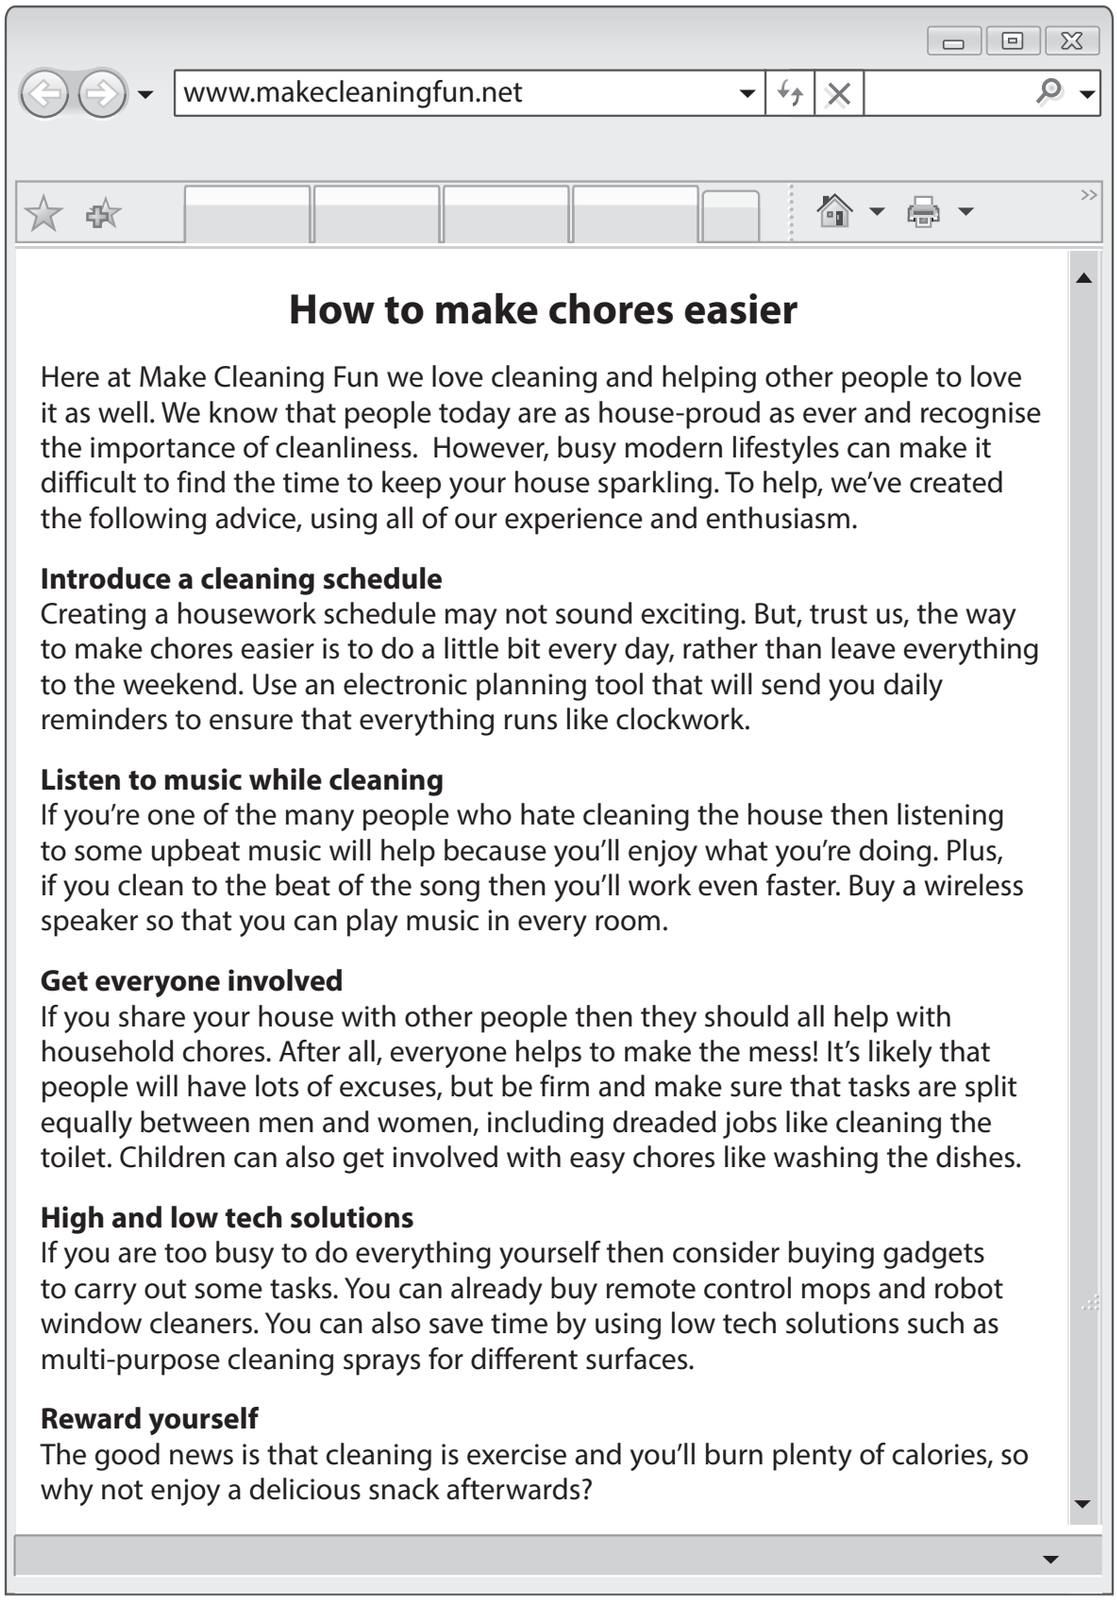

In the kitchen your coffee machine has already made you a cappuccino, just the way you like it. This happened automatically thanks to another useful phone app. You had pizza last night, but there's no need to worry about cleaning the oven, as your self-cleaning oven will take care of any residue from the pizza.

Entering the living room you see another marvel of modern science at work. Your robot vacuum cleaner has cleaned up as it is programmed to do and is now returning to its dock to recharge. The highly unpopular chore of cleaning the floor has been accomplished without you lifting a finger.

Sound like something from science fiction? Well, all this technology already exists, but at the moment it is too expensive for the ordinary consumer. However, purchase costs are likely to reduce in the next few years and then we could all be living the dream.

But there might be a problem. Our working hours are already going up and all these new inventions could just mean we work even longer days. Will all this convenience actually be helpful if it doesn't give us any more leisure time?

How to make chores easier

Here at Make Cleaning Fun we love cleaning and helping other people to love it as well. We know that people today are as house-proud as ever and recognise the importance of cleanliness. However, busy modern lifestyles can make it difficult to find the time to keep your house sparkling. To help, we've created the following advice, using all of our experience and enthusiasm.

Introduce a cleaning schedule
Creating a housework schedule may not sound exciting. But, trust us, the way to make chores easier is to do a little bit every day, rather than leave everything to the weekend. Use an electronic planning tool that will send you daily reminders to ensure that everything runs like clockwork.

Listen to music while cleaning
If you're one of the many people who hate cleaning the house then listening to some upbeat music will help because you'll enjoy what you're doing. Plus, if you clean to the beat of the song then you'll work even faster. Buy a wireless speaker so that you can play music in every room.

Get everyone involved
If you share your house with other people then they should all help with household chores. After all, everyone helps to make the mess! It's likely that people will have lots of excuses, but be firm and make sure that tasks are split equally between men and women, including dreaded jobs like cleaning the toilet. Children can also get involved with easy chores like washing the dishes.

High and low tech solutions
If you are too busy to do everything yourself then consider buying gadgets to carry out some tasks. You can already buy remote control mops and robot window cleaners. You can also save time by using low tech solutions such as multi-purpose cleaning sprays for different surfaces.

Reward yourself
The good news is that cleaning is exercise and you'll burn plenty of calories, so why not enjoy a delicious snack afterwards?

How we clean today

According to a recent survey, families are trying to turn the task of cleaning the house into a sprint rather than a marathon. As a result, the average time spent cleaning has fallen by 32 minutes a week or 28 hours a year compared to 2014.

The casual approach to keeping the dirt, grime and dust at bay suggests the nation is a little less house-proud than in the past. It reflects the fact that the nation's culture of working long hours means that people do not have the time to do a weekly deep clean. It also suggests that many people find cleaning boring and try to avoid it.

Despite the claims of men to be taking on a greater share of household chores, women are still doing the heavy lifting in the kitchen and bathroom. On average, women spend 90 minutes longer each week than men on cleaning – the average woman cleans for 4 hours 51 minutes a week, whereas the average man cleans for only 3 hours 21 minutes.

Retail analysts Mintel said the availability of multi-purpose cleaning sprays that you can use all around the house is a factor in helping people speed up. Retail expert, Richard Hopping, said: 'The average amount of time that British people spend on cleaning their home each week has fallen by half an hour in recent years.'

Mintel found that 62% of the nation say they clean when they have the time and that just one in three has a schedule. Just over 40% say their aim is to do the job as quickly as humanly possible as they dislike cleaning. Around half really put their backs into it to ensure their home is spotless.

The study found cleaning the oven is the task people hate the most, with 67% ranking it among their top three dislikes. People also loathed dusting, but were relatively relaxed about wiping down worktops, mopping, sweeping and vacuuming. Do you agree with these findings?
