Text A

Do you want to work abroad?

Last year 200,000 British people left the UK to start a life elsewhere. Even a short time living abroad can be beneficial for expanding your personal experiences and is desirable to future employers. Think carefully though; there are some vital things to remember.

Decisions

Can you face leaving behind family and friends? The move can be quite daunting for most people. On the other hand, it could satisfy your curiosity and desire for something different. Just make sure your heart is in it.

Jobs

Many jobs are advertised in online magazines and newsletters, so register with as many of these as possible. The internet has made the world smaller and has increased your opportunities.

Depending on where you are looking, you may need to get applications, references or CVs translated and there are programs to help you do this online. You may have to travel to attend an interview or answer questions via video conferencing.

Legal requirements

The need for work permits and visas should be researched.

Health insurance could also be a problem if you don't buy it before you go. You don't want to be flying home every time you are unwell.

Culture

Moving to a new country is very different to going there on holiday. Getting used to a new way of life, new people and a new culture takes time and effort. However, this could be one of the most enjoyable aspects of moving abroad. Soak up the experience and learn from it; it shows adaptability for your CV. You will have new places to visit and perhaps a new language to learn while you're there.

Communication

Moving abroad doesn't mean cutting yourself off from the people and places you have known before. Skype, email and instant messaging mean that family and friends can still be a few clicks away.

Volunteering Abroad

Volunteering Abroad (VA) is a volunteering organisation. It arranges projects for people from the UK to help in some of the poorest areas in the world.

Volunteers often work and stay with host families in the local community to ensure they have the most genuine and meaningful experience possible. This helps in developing your language skills and understanding the local culture and its values. You could also create friendships which could last a lifetime. Alternatively, you could share a hostel with other volunteers. Lodging and food are included in your package.

This isn't a holiday and you need to make sure it is the right thing for you. It is challenging work, but hugely rewarding. This could be a great opportunity for personal development and to show employers what you are capable of. It is unforgettable work experience and you will learn skills to take into your chosen profession.

You don't need a lot of money to apply for VA, and it's not just about skills or qualifications either. What you must have is the ambition to make a difference.

Projects

Our placements can be wide and varied. Do you think you could help people improve their English? Or could you take part in building and renovation work? We could use your existing skills in appropriate placements and all of our contracts offer meaningful and productive experiences.

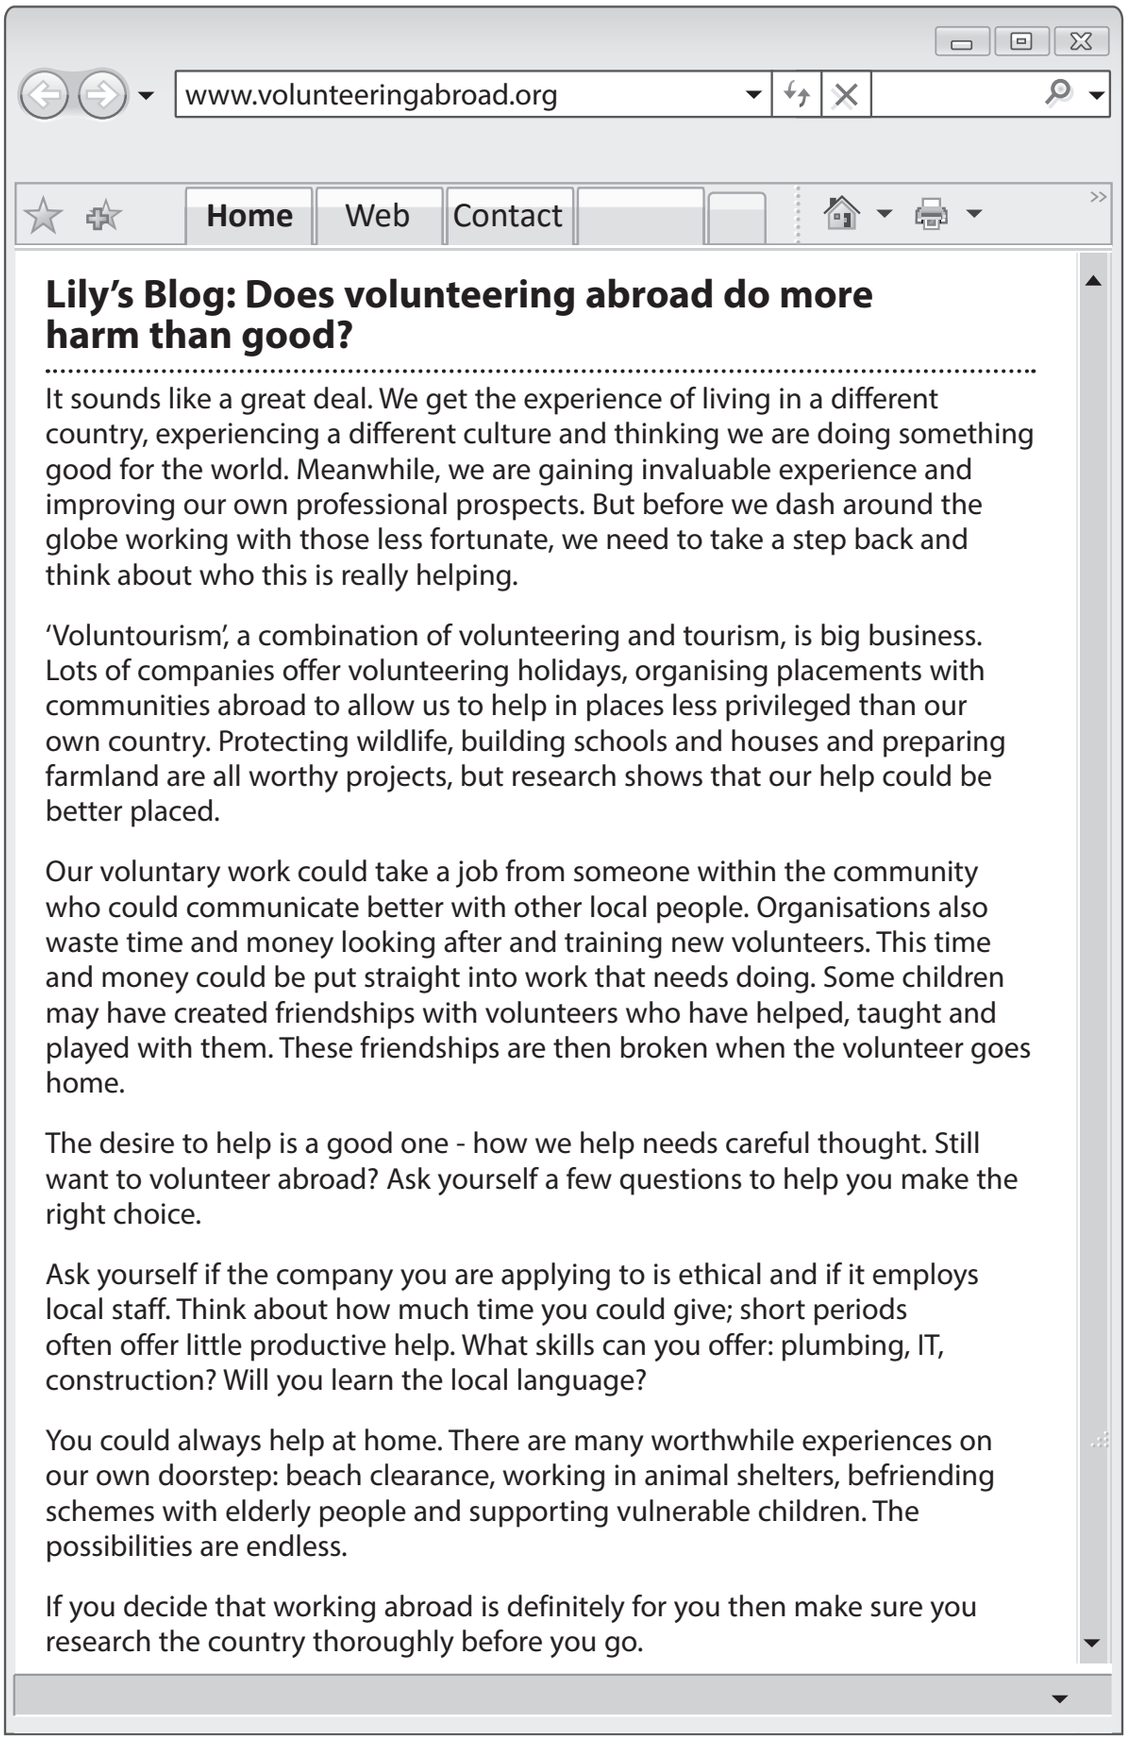

Commitment

We can provide support in covering travel and vaccination costs, as well as paying you a local living allowance and your healthcare expenses. VA delivers full training for your project so that you are confident when you work with us.

In return we would expect 100% dedication to the project and so this is a big decision to make. We would need between three weeks and one year of your time depending on your chosen assignment.

Text C

Lily's Blog: Does volunteering abroad do more harm than good?

It sounds like a great deal. We get the experience of living in a different country, experiencing a different culture and thinking we are doing something good for the world. Meanwhile, we are gaining invaluable experience and improving our own professional prospects. But before we dash around the globe working with those less fortunate, we need to take a step back and think about who this is really helping.

'Voluntourism', a combination of volunteering and tourism, is big business. Lots of companies offer volunteering holidays, organising placements with communities abroad to allow us to help in places less privileged than our own country. Protecting wildlife, building schools and houses and preparing farmland are all worthy projects, but research shows that our help could be better placed.

Our voluntary work could take a job from someone within the community who could communicate better with other local people. Organisations also waste time and money looking after and training new volunteers. This time and money could be put straight into work that needs doing. Some children may have created friendships with volunteers who have helped, taught and played with them. These friendships are then broken when the volunteer goes home.

The desire to help is a good one - how we help needs careful thought. Still want to volunteer abroad? Ask yourself a few questions to help you make the right choice.

Ask yourself if the company you are applying to is ethical and if it employs local staff. Think about how much time you could give; short periods often offer little productive help. What skills can you offer: plumbing, IT, construction? Will you learn the local language?

You could always help at home. There are many worthwhile experiences on our own doorstep: beach clearance, working in animal shelters, befriending schemes with elderly people and supporting vulnerable children. The possibilities are endless.

If you decide that working abroad is definitely for you then make sure you research the country thoroughly before you go.
