Document 2

Umphafa is a private nature reserve in South Africa. It stretches across 17 square miles.

Before the reserve began, native animals had been driven away. This was because of farming methods in the area and poachers. Some animals did remain in the area though. They have thrived since we opened the reserve.

We have also introduced many more species to the area. It is now the home to white rhino, giraffe, zebra, warthog and aardvark - to name but a few!

Even leopards and spotted hyenas can be found on the reserve now. These had once disappeared from the area. They have now returned naturally. This makes us very proud.

We take care to manage the animals on the reserve. Our rangers track and record the animals. This way we know how they are doing.

	£10 will pay for the diesel a ranger needs for a day. The rangers travel around the reserve. They make sure that the animals on the reserve stay fit and healthy.
	£25 will pay the wages of three guards for a day. These guards patrol the reserve. They protect the animals from poachers.
	£100 can buy a camera trap. Some animals are very hard to find. The cameras help us to track them.
