Article

MFS ACTIVE READING GUIDE · TEXT B (ARTICLE: QUESTIONS 5·8, 14, 15)

· Purpose: Reports on Barclaycard festival spending study (Q7 footnote), stalls (Q8a) & testing (Q8b).

· Key: Gold = Q5 Quotes | Green = Q6 Opinion ('D') | Crimson = Q7 Barclaycard & Q8a/b | Navy = Q15

Festival-goers will spend £1.2bn on food, clothes and merchandise this summer

by

Emma Elsworthy

Q5/8a: New trends

Q5: Spend freely

Festival-goers will shell out a whopping £1.2 billion this summer on food, clothes and merchandise. Researchers who polled 2,000 adults found 36% plan to go to some sort of live entertainment event this year. And the stats show the average adult will part with £67 a day, as they browse stalls and enjoy games, rides and other festival experiences.

Food is the biggest daily spend at a festival, with the average music fan forking out £46 to keep themselves fed. However, the study[1] found food preferences have changed – and the days of chips and burgers are long gone. Festival-goers are now tucking into thali (16%), fish curry (15%) and kimchee (14%).

Making memories is increasingly important to people when deciding how to spend their money, with many keen to take away something extra from their festival experience. It emerged eight in 10 festival-lovers will splash out on unique products that can't be found elsewhere.

Four in 10 even prefer to shop at live entertainment events rather than online or on the high street – with a third considering these events better places to uncover new trends. 41% said they feel more connected to the products they buy at a festival.

The study also polled 200 companies who sell goods at festivals. Half the companies said that they try out products which they'll then later roll out online or in store. Of those who have used festivals as a testing ground, four in five companies do so because they consider attendees to be fairly open-minded, and 83% like the idea of receiving direct feedback. Some companies polled believed that their sales will continue to rise in the future, but others were less confident.
