Question 1

You will be assessed on:

- Communicating information, ideas and opinions clearly, coherently and effectively
- Communicating with appropriate detail to suit purpose and audience
- Using appropriate format and structure for purpose and audience
- Conveying clear meaning and establishing cohesion using organisational markers
- Using appropriate language and register for purpose and audience
- Constructing complex sentences consistently and accurately, using paragraphs where appropriate
- Using correct spelling, punctuation and grammar.

Question 1

You have recently been on two different work placements.

- You were given the first placement but you found it to be quite boring and irrelevant to your future career path.
- You chose the second one yourself and found it much more interesting and beneficial because it was more relevant to your career plans.

Your task: write a blog about your experiences aimed at people preparing for work experience. Your blog should encourage people to seek their own work placements in an area that interests them and explain how it will benefit their career development.

(27 marks)

Write around 5 to 8 paragraphs.

Question 2

You will be assessed on:

- Communicating information, ideas and opinions clearly, coherently and effectively
- Communicating with appropriate detail to suit purpose and audience
- Using appropriate format and structure for purpose and audience
- Conveying clear meaning and establishing cohesion using organisational markers
- Using appropriate language and register for purpose and audience
- Constructing complex sentences consistently and accurately, using paragraphs where appropriate
- Using correct spelling, punctuation and grammar.

Question 2

It is well known that celebrities use the media to help their careers, but they don't seem to like it when the media covers their private lives.

- Is it right how the media treats celebrities?
- How do celebrities benefit from the media and how does the media benefit from celebrities?
- Should anything be off-limits or can the media cover everything about celebrities and their private lives?

Your task: Write an article for a student magazine exploring the extent to which it is fair that the private lives of celebrities are covered in the media.

WHY CHOOSING YOUR OWN WORK PLACEMENT CHANGES EVERYTHING

When it comes to work experience, taking control of your own placement can be the single best career decision you make. Having recently completed two very different placements, I learned this lesson first-hand.

My first placement was allocated to me in a busy administrative office. Although the staff were polite, the tasks—mostly filing old invoices—felt repetitive and completely unrelated to my ambition of working in healthcare.

Determined not to waste my second opportunity, I researched local clinics and emailed a physiotherapy practice directly. Because I chose an area that genuinely fascinated me, every day felt purposeful. I observed patient consultations, learned how appointments are triaged, and asked meaningful questions.

Most importantly, showing initiative impressed my supervisors, who offered me a glowing reference and part-time holiday work. If you are preparing for work experience, do not settle for a random placement. Reach out to employers in your chosen field—your future self will thank you.

THE FAME GAME: WHERE SHOULD THE MEDIA DRAW THE LINE?

Celebrities and the media have always shared a complicated relationship. On one hand, actors, musicians, and athletes rely on newspapers, magazines, and social platforms to promote new films, tours, and charitable campaigns. Without media publicity, even the greatest talent would struggle to reach a global audience.

Conversely, media outlets profit enormously from celebrity interviews and exclusive photographs, which drive online clicks and magazine sales. Yet this mutually beneficial arrangement raises a crucial ethical question: does public fame forfeit a person's right to privacy?

While public figures must expect scrutiny of their professional work—or hypocrisy when their public statements contradict their actions—intrusive photography of their children, private medical records, or family holidays crosses a clear moral boundary. Celebrities are human beings, not public property. Responsible journalism should celebrate achievement and hold power to account without invading personal dignity.
