One flight from London to South Africa produces as much pollution as each passenger heating their own home for a whole year. Aircraft fuel is one of the biggest causes of global warming and climate change.

Should we reduce the amount we fly?
Should we only take holidays in the UK?
Should the price of plane tickets go up to stop so many people flying?
Are people's rights to have a holiday abroad more important than the planet?

Your task: write an article for a student magazine exploring the issue of so many people flying abroad for holidays and the pollution it causes.

Task 1 Model Response

MFS Stepped Model Solution Continuation Sheet (Overflow-Safe Layout)

GROUNDED OR GOING GREEN: SHOULD WE RETHINK HOLIDAY FLIGHTS?

It is a sobering statistic: a single return flight from London to South Africa generates as much carbon pollution as heating a family home for an entire year. As climate change accelerates, students and travellers alike face a difficult question, can we justify cheap, frequent flights abroad?

Raising ticket prices through aviation taxes might discourage unnecessary weekend city breaks, yet it risks making international travel a luxury reserved only for the wealthy. Holidaying in the UK offers wonderful coastal towns and national parks, but unreliable weather and high domestic rail fares often push families back toward budget airlines.

Dear Ms Stephens,

Re: Thank You for My Marketing Work Placement

I am writing to express my sincere gratitude to you and the entire marketing team for welcoming me during my two-week work placement at Lakeside Theme Park.

The experience was immensely valuable. Shadowing your digital campaigns taught me how seasonal promotions are planned, while assisting with the autumn social media calendar showed me how professional copywriting engages families.

I particularly enjoyed analysing visitor survey data and helping design posters for the Halloween Lantern Trail. Everyone in the office was patient, encouraging, and generous with their advice.

For future placement students, a brief welcome pack outlining your brand guidelines on day one would make settling in even smoother. This placement has confirmed my ambition to pursue a career in digital marketing.

Yours sincerely,

(Borderline Exemplar: Main points covered, but brief detail and occasional informal phrasing / comma splices.)
