This online newspaper article encourages people to cycle to work.

Cycling to Work

Cycling is a great way to get to work. Riding a bike to work makes you happier, healthier and wealthier, but your colleagues imagine that cycling is dangerous, inconvenient, and exhausting. Here are some suggestions to help you convince them to get on their bikes.

1. Just do it!
Simply turn up at work on time each day, looking happy. That's easy. Cyclists don't get stuck in traffic or get delayed by problems with public transport. Cycling is fun too, and the exercise helps burn off stress.

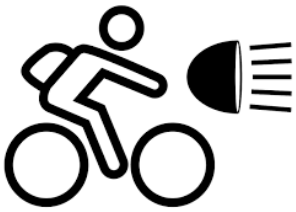

Image 1

2. Share your routes
One reason people give for not cycling is fear of traffic. You could tell them about the quieter routes through backstreets, parks and cycle paths. Show them websites such as www.cyclemaps.org.uk, which has cycle maps across the UK, and www.cyclestreets.net, which gives bike-friendly routes for you. You could even offer to ride with them yourself.

3. Training
A course on cycling skills would be useful for anyone returning to cycling. Instructors are listed online at www.dft.gov.uk/bikeability/. Costs range from nothing up to £30 per hour.

4. What bikes cost
A £500 bike that's used regularly will be much better value than a bike costing £100 from a high street chain store. If you can get your colleagues to understand that a good bike costs the same as a good computer, and that you get what you pay for, you're part way there. Use a good local bike shop and you'll end up with a bike that is fit for purpose. Some catalogues and online shops don't value this customer care; their aim is to stack them high and sell them cheap. A local bike shop wants repeat business.

5. In the workplace
Cycling facilities at work such as secure bike storage and showers make cycling to work a more attractive idea. Why not ask your HR department to install them?

BIKE CRASH The first things to do.

Over 18,000 cyclists were injured on the roads in 2017, and being involved in a cycling crash can be a shocking experience.

Your bike may be mangled, your possessions scattered. Your clothes may be torn. You may have cuts or feel that you have broken something. Here's what you should do if you are involved in a collision.

1. Are you safe?

When you are knocked off your bicycle, your first priority must be to get to a safe spot. If you can't move out of harm's way, then shout, wave or whistle to attract attention. Call the police too, because they will keep a record of the call and it can be useful evidence.

2. Were there any witnesses?
Make sure you get the registration number, make, model and colour of any vehicles involved in the collision. Also try and find independent witnesses. If you are injured, ask someone else to collect details for you.

3. Do you have evidence?
If you have a camera, take as many pictures as you can. Drawings can be useful if your phone has been smashed. Parked cars, kerbs, drains, painted lines, lamp posts and skid marks can also be useful evidence. Sign, date and put a time on your account, and keep it safe together with the receipts you get for paying for any repairs to your bike.

Document Three

This magazine item suggests how readers can buy and sell bikes.

Welcome to Cycling Weekly Classifieds – the best magazine forum for buying and selling bikes.

Look through our list of used cycles, parts and accessories to bag yourself a bargain.

You'll find everything you could possibly need from individual parts to complete bicycles.

Got something to sell? Placing your advert couldn't be easier. It will appear every week until sold or withdrawn. Put your advert on this page or look at what's for sale in our online shop.

Adverts cost £25 for bikes over £500. Adverts for bikes under £500 and for everything else cost £10.

Please note that only the first 75 words of your advert will appear in Cycling Weekly magazine, so please keep it brief.

Space is limited, so sprint to our website www.cyclingweekly.org/classifieds to submit your advert. We are confident you will be delighted with the result!
